I'm made to carry the world, and all its cares And bear them like a moral load. – Lord Tennyson I won't be back again Love nor money can buy And I'm no good at patience The pattern's all worn out And I'm no good at waiting I'm not good at making concessions I'm not good at losses. – The Poem by Stan Gadd All done! Related page: In this guide we will show you how you can create a small bug bounty program. We give you a brief introduction to bug bounty programs and how to implement them. We then demonstrate how to configure a successful bounty for a Java web application. Finally we show you how to secure your bounty program and report Java web application security issues. The bounty method is useful for organizations as well as companies who are looking to carry out a responsible disclosure program for their products. The bounty method uses security engineers from various organizations to scan for software vulnerabilities. The most important aspects of a successful bounty program are: 1. Program Infrastructure: Infrastructure matters. Well-constructed bug bounty programs include robust monitoring, system and network analysis, automated scanners, and reporting capabilities. 2. Security Research Infrastructure: Bug bounty programs cannot be effective unless they support an existing security research infrastructure. This includes tools that analyze and monitor a system or network, find bugs and security weaknesses, and report these findings to the administrators. This guide is a practical guide for those who want to start a bug bounty program. It is not a guide that lists all the bugs in a given software. That would be impossible because there are too many bugs. Here, we focus on how you can quickly and easily start a bug bounty program for your products. Next, we present the infrastructure we use to collect and analyze the issues. Finally we demonstrate how we report vulnerabilities to the software authors. If you want to learn more about software vulnerabilities, we recommend reading our other content: • How to make it easier for responsible disclosure of software issues • Private communication for responsible disclosure of software issues Taping out the bug bounty program Overview of bug bounty 570a42141b
